Victor Love Cast To Play Clay Wright In New Film Entitled “Red All Over”

Victor Love will play Clay Wright in a new film set to shoot in January of 2014 entitled, “Red All Over”. The film focuses on gun violence to bring awareness and much needed discussion to issues surrounding gun control.

HOUSTON, TX (December 2, 2013) - Victor Love is slated to play Clay Wright in a new film entitled “Red All Over” set to shoot at the beginning of the year in Houston, Texas. Love is best known for his roles in “Native Son” with Oprah Winfrey and “Gang Related” starring James Belushi, James Earl Jones and Tupac Shakur. The actor will play an alcoholic father in the film who sees the error of his ways after he ousts his son Red from the house for being defiant. Per the title, the film is focused on Red and his devastating choice to then take a harmful matter into his own hands. The film incorporates the hardship surrounding gun violence and the harm it does both physically and emotionally to families and communities.

Dedicated to the children who have suffered from gun violence since the start of the project Londyn Town Pictures and Clarity Film Partners join forces to produce the timely film. Written by Cess Black and John Wayne S. III “Red All Over” will begin production in January of 2014. Produced by John Wayne S. III, Marlo Baker, Channing Hughes, Harvey Clemmons and Elanor Jones the team hopes to elicit a nationwide conversation about gun control issues.

Wayne S. said of the film, “We know Victor Love will bring a special resonance to the film. Our entire cast will bring this timely piece to life. We’re going to do everything we can to dramatically show how readily available guns are to our children in this country and how the violence harms us all, especially those in the families directly affected.”
